

The New York Times

The Library provides free online access to the New York Times on Internet computers at the Main Library and Branches, and 24-hour offsite access through our website by code activation.

Offsite/remote access

Open a web browser

Go to fcl.org

Click on Resources then New York Times

Scroll down to Offsite/remote access

Click on the link that says remote access code

*Click “Redeem” to get 24 hours of continuous access.

Register with your personal email address, or click on “log in here” if you have already created an account.

Once you have created your account (or have logged in), you will receive an email confirmation of your 24-hour, unlimited access to New York Times Digital.

* After the first 24 hours have passed, you will need to redeem another code for another 24 hours of remote access (i.e. Repeat Step 2). This is the licensing model that New York Times has negotiated with public libraries.

 Please be advised that registering an email address with New York Times Digital will opt you into receiving email marketing communications from the New York Times. To opt out of receiving mailings, follow the unsubscribe instructions at the bottom of the email messages you.

Using New York Times Digital App

The New York Times Digital app is free and available for the following operating systems: Android, iOS, Fire tablets

Please visit your device's app store to get the app. You will need to follow the "Offsite/remote access" instructions above to access New York Times Digital on the app.

If you're using a mobile device, open your device's browser to Fcl.org – select the Resources tab then the New York Times page with the remote access link to get the access code, not the New York Times app itself. Then, once you launch the NYT app and sign in with the email address you used to register, the code will have already been applied.
